NYC Open Data is NYC Data at Work

Behind every data point on nyc.gov/data is a story of New York City government in action. Every City employee uses data in their work. Data keeps the City accountable to New Yorkers, marking progress on important efforts such as filling reported potholes and creating affordable housing. Data is used in real time to respond to rapidly changing circumstances, such as deciding where to send plows during a snowstorm or what streets to shut down during emergencies. Data is also used over the course of months and years to address systemic problems, such as preparing for rising sea levels. Large datasets can communicate important information, such as the results of civil service exams and which taxi drivers can be on the road at any time. Finally, data helps optimize limited City resources, through advanced analytics on various agency datasets that can help guide decisions like where to send building inspectors and how to fund critical programs. In this way, data stretches every taxpayer dollar even further.

The City's commitment to Open Data for All means open data for people from all walks of life, from all five boroughs, who are using open data to make a difference in their communities—including educators, students, artists, builders, small business owners, advocates, reporters, community board members. It also means open data for the 300,000 hardworking men and women who make New York City safer, cleaner, and more equitable.

This report shows how information created by the City powers operational excellence both within the four walls of City Hall and outside of them. It provides updates on the City's work to make Open Data for All a reality, highlighting initiatives undertaken by the Mayor's Office of Data Analytics (MODA), the Department of Information Technology and Telecommunications (DoITT), and Open Data Coordinators within City agencies to ensure that high-quality data gets into the hands of change makers from Port Richmond to Washington Heights.

This report also features stories of specific datasets published by some of the 90 City agencies and offices. These stories detail how a single data point is identified, collected, analyzed, and used to make decisions. As the amount of data maintained by City agencies increases—over 400 new datasets were identified for publication in this year's schedule for future dataset releases—open data serves as a practical and efficient way to share facts at the scale of the City operations they represent.

The following seven stories highlight a few of the many ways in which public data powers the work carried out by New York City agencies every day—to keep your government running at the pace of the New Yorkers it serves.

Want to start exploring for yourself? Dive into the 17 datasets behind these stories at bit.ly/NYCDDataAtWork.

Data in the Public Right of Way

The number of street trees. Restaurant letter grades. Locations of fire hydrants. New Yorkers encounter these data points every day, but may not realize the City keeps datasets on these and many other elements that make up the urban landscape.

Behind every fire hydrant is an engineer at the Department of Environmental Protection, monitoring data on water levels from upstate reservoirs to make sure firefighters are adequately equipped in emergency situations.

Behind every tree lining a sidewalk is a community volunteer who took the time to count it and record observations about species, perceived health, damage to surroundings, and other vital signs. NYC Parks uses this data from the Street Tree Census to make decisions about how to maintain New York City's urban forest.

Behind every letter grade that hangs in a restaurant window is an inspector who keeps food establishments accountable to the people who eat in them. Blue A's and green B's are a familiar part of New Yorkers' dining routine. The Department of Health and Mental Hygiene publishes data not only on these letter grades, but also on specific violations resulting from restaurant inspections. This public data encourages restaurants to create the best possible experience for their customers and allows the City to take necessary action when unsafe or unsanitary conditions are not corrected.

These are just a few examples of the many ways the work of New York City government is reflected in the public right of way. Wherever the City is at work, there is often an open dataset behind it.

How Data Helps Coordinate Street Closures for Community Events

An approved event application

In January, organizers at the Kingsbridge Heights Community Center (KHCC) submitted an application for their May 2018 block party. Such an event requires shutting down an entire street—and coordination between multiple City agencies.

Any event requires careful planning; for the KHCC, throwing the annual block party means shutting down Kingsbridge Terrace between Summit Place and Perot Street, on the east side of the community center's Bronx location.

A core responsibility of City government is regulating public space. That's why the Street Activity Permitting Office (SAPO) exists: SAPO ensures that those who want to use property belonging to the City—like sidewalks, streets, or pedestrian plazas—do so in a fair, safe way that minimizes disruption to the community. Before the KHCC could host its block party, it needed to file an application for a permit through SAPO's online portal, called EAPPLY.

When KHCC hit "submit" on the EAPPLY website, the application created a data "record," with a unique identifier in the Citywide Event Management System—Event ID # 392953. This record included the event name, the start and end date and time, the location, and the degree to which the street or plaza would be closed (curbside-only, partial, or full).

A SAPO borough manager reviewed the application and determined it needed supporting permits—one from the Police Department for amplified sound, and one from the Department of Consumer Affairs for a portable amusement device (such as a moonbounce). NYC Parks and the Department of Transportation were also coordinated, and confirmed that there were no construction conflicts with the event. Once this criteria was met, SAPO issued the community center an approved permit through the online system, and on May 5, the block party went off without a hitch.

Each year, more than 45,000 New York City events like the KHCC Block Party are issued permits from the event management offices of various City agencies. All of these records are collected in the Citywide Event Management System, which the Office of Citywide Event Coordination and Management uses to coordinate event permitting and ensure events approved by separate agencies don't conflict. It also shares this data with other agencies like the Fire Department, the Department of Sanitation, the MTA, community boards, and business improvement districts. This encourages neighborhood voices to weigh in on the events in their communities, and assures events in the city are both safe and enjoyable for all.

A dataset of upcoming events has been available since 2013. Thanks to Local Law 106 of 2015, the Office of Citywide Event Coordination and Management began publishing a historical dataset of event records in 2017. This archive provides event data as far back as 2008. Sociologists Maria Abascal of Columbia University and Delia Baldassarri of New York University are using this archived data in their research to observe which communities are more likely to engage in collective action by organizing and hosting events. In addition to demonstrating the range and diversity of ways our city streets may be utilized, the researchers have found that City-permitted events—like block parties, play-streets, and clean-ups—are great proxies for participation in civic life through collective action.

A ROW IS:

A street segment; an emergency incident

New York City is a city in flux. Citywide Street Centerline (CSCL) data is one way the City keeps up—ensuring emergency responders always know the fastest and best routes when responding to your call.

Our urban landscape is always changing: A booming housing development industry makes for a steady stream of new doorsteps on city blocks. Furthermore, regular government capital projects—such as the development of new parks or the redesign of dangerous street intersections—means the physical makeup of our city is constantly shifting, bit by bit. Changing neighborhood demographics necessitate redrawn City Council districts every decade.

Throughout these changes, the City's operational agencies require trusted, up-to-date, and highly detailed geographic information. This is especially crucial for emergency services: When a New Yorker calls 911, or when streets are covered in snow, the clock starts ticking. The Police Department, the Fire Department, the Department of Sanitation, and many other agencies rely on Citywide Street Centerline (CSCL), a public dataset which serves as the geospatial data backbone of New York City government. CSCL lets agencies know where things are—and how to get there.

Jointly managed by the Department of City Planning and DoITT, CSCL data is updated daily with geographic data provided by the Borough Presidents, the Department of Buildings, the Department of Finance, the Board of Elections, and the City Council. Information on address ranges for a given block, the direction traffic can move on a given street segment, boundaries of community board and election districts, and LinkNYC kiosk locations are only a few of the dozens of locational attributes that fall under the purview of CSCL.

Every week, police and fire emergency dispatch systems perform an ETL, or "extract-transform-load" process, on the CSCL data file so that 911 dispatchers have the latest information on the City's geography. In turn, each incident—whether it's a fire involving red engine firetrucks, EMS responses involving ambulances, or police responses to crime—is recorded. This data, which can be used to evaluate performance goals such as responding to incidents more quickly, can be found on NYC Open Data, too.

The effects of CSCL can be seen across the NYC Open Data Platform. Thanks to Local Law 108 of 2015, all datasets on NYC Open Data that contain a street address are required to have eight standardized geospatial attributes. The 80% of datasets that have so far met this requirement have CSCL to thank: The dataset supplies information to power GeoSupport, an application maintained by the Department of City Planning that is used by analysts and developers across the City to add locational attributes to data for mapping and analysis.

What Taxi Trip Data Tells Us About Mobility and Driver Welfare

Five passengers enter a yellow taxi just after midnight in the Lower East Side, seconds after the Times Square Ball drops on New Year's Day 2017. They travel 4.25 miles to Bushwick, get out a little before 12:20—and data about their trip helps the City ensure everyone's safety.

The Taxi and Limousine Commission (TLC) is the City agency that regulates over 185,000 drivers and over 130,000 vehicles-for-hire including yellow taxis, green taxis, and for-hire services like Uber and Lyft. Hop into any of these vehicles, and a record of your trip makes its way to the TLC. Taxi trip records are collected and provided by licensed Technology Service Providers, and for-hire trip records are collected and provided by licensed For-Hire Bases.

Your trip record is just one of billions of rows of data collected since 2008 that provide a window into the way New Yorkers get around our city—when they go, where they go, and how many people they go with. These records help TLC track down your belongings if you leave them behind in a taxi (and can't remember its official license number). They also help identify drivers if you want to compliment one for exceptional service (or complain about poor service).

These billions of trip records, when aggregated and analyzed together, also allow the City to make policy changes that affect both those in the passenger's seat and those in the driver's seat. A string of trip records with the same driver can show the hours they have put in behind the wheel and the amount of money they are earning. Analyzed over the long-term, the City can see how drivers' work hours and incomes have changed over time.

From there the City can take action. In 2017, New York City set limits on the number of hours drivers can spend on the road each day and each week to keep both drivers and passengers safe. Not only did the data inform the rules, it also helps TLC monitor and enforce the policy. More recently, the City Council passed legislation paving the way for rules to ensure fair compensation for hardworking for-hire vehicle drivers. The new laws also require the City to study ways to reduce congestion and protect driver income through regulation. Having the data allows TLC and the City to craft solutions based in fact. Making anonymized and aggregated versions of that data available on the Open Data Platform allows the public to see the impact.

After dropping off those five passengers on New Year's Eve in Bushwick, the driver heads home to rest and be refreshed for a new day of work. Trip data can tell us not just stories of New Yorkers moving around but also stories about the people who provide those trips. With this data, the City not only ensures safe and equitable passenger service, but also the welfare of the over 185,000 licensed drivers.

Multiple Datasets Come Together to Shed Light on Urban Problems

This is the story of two different datasets. The first set comprises information about who owns what, and where Property data today serves as the digital backbone to many municipal operations. In New York City, the Information Technology Division at the Department of City Planning compiles information on tax lots from several City agencies in the Primary Land Use Tax Lot Output dataset, called “PLUTO.”

The second set comprises 311 data. When a New Yorker dials 311, they want an answer to a question or a solution to a problem; the service is powered by digital infrastructure, artificial intelligence applications, and reams of data. Most 311 inquiries are informational, but one in ten calls, texts, and application-based messages to 311 trigger a request to City agencies for services ranging from restoring heat and hot water to filling a pothole. Each record is tracked digitally, coming together to form the roughly three million annual service requests in the 311 Service Request dataset.

So what do 311 and PLUTO have in common? While each open dataset is collected in different ways and serves different purposes, together they can be analyzed to tell the story of who, what, where, when, and why of urban issues.

Data scientists at MODA have seen this firsthand. In one project, MODA built a statistical model to help the Department of Buildings and the Fire Department prioritize how to allocate 200 inspectors to investigate complaints of illegally converted dwellings. Using PLUTO and 311 data alongside fire incident data, MODA found that homes with histories of tax delinquency, mortgage liens, and buildings violations reported through 311 are the most likely to contain illegal conversions. Based on this discovery, MODA developed a model to send inspectors to the riskiest places first.

In another project with the NYC Tenant Harassment Prevention Task Force, MODA helped focus enforcement resources by testing whether potential signs of tenant harassment—including 311 complaints about dust from illegal construction and dirty conditions such as mold or standing water—could predict a building’s risk of losing rent stabilized units. Properties that displayed those conditions were nominated to inspectors for a closer look. Like the open datasets that power them, the methodology and results of these analyses are made public on MODA’s open source analytics library and GitHub account.

Analyzing incident-level data (like 311 service requests) alongside locational data (such as PLUTO data on a property’s physical conditions, or Census data on neighborhood characteristics) starts to piece together a more holistic picture of city problems than each data source on its own.

A civil service candidate; a certified company

Urban park ranger. Psychologist. School safety agent. Child protective specialist. City planner. These are just a few of the civil service titles New Yorkers apply for when they take the New York City Civil Service Exam. Administered by the Department of Citywide Administrative Services, these exams are part of a century-old system rooted in transparency and public accountability and designed to assess candidates interested in public service using a fair, consistent, and merit-based approach. For decades, the results of civil service examinations were posted on a wall in the municipal building at 1 Centre Street in Manhattan, where prospective employees would go to check their ranking. Today these lists are published as a dataset on the Open Data Platform, allowing New Yorkers who aspire to join the ranks of 300,000 public servants to see how they performed—without making a journey to Lower Manhattan. In June 2018, when the City released the much-anticipated results of the firefighter civil service exam, web traffic to the Civil Service dataset on the Open Data Platform increased 16-fold, representing tens of thousands of potential firefighters learning how they ranked.

In addition to making the process to work for the City more accessible, data helps create a fair and transparent process for those who want to do business with the City. The City's Minority and Women-Owned Business Enterprises (M/WBE) Program expands opportunities for minority and women entrepreneurs to access City contracts and grow their businesses. When eligible businesses take the first step and get certified by the City, they become more visible to prospective buyers, including City agencies and private contractors. On NYC Open Data, you can find thousands of certified M/WBEs, Locally-based Business Enterprises (LBE), and Emerging Business Enterprises (EBE). They are engineers and lawyers, plumbers and graphic designers, restaurant suppliers and architects. The Department of Small Business Services shares this data with other City agencies and private contractors, facilitating contracting opportunities. This data also allows the City to set benchmarks and assess its progress toward increasing contracting opportunities for these businesses. The data shows, for instance, that the percentage of the total value of contracts going to M/WBEs increased from 8.0% in FY15 to 14.3% in FY16. Last year, the City of New York awarded M/WBEs a record-breaking $1 billion of its $80 billion dollar budget (also an open dataset) in contracts.

Digital Transformation Offers Insight Into Our Vertical City

As New York City grows upward, the Department of Buildings is upgrading its information-technology infrastructure for the 21st century.

In decades past, applying for a construction permit, filing a complaint about illegal construction activity, or recording the results of a building inspection would involve bringing or mailing physical paper documents to the Department of Buildings (DOB). Today, all paper documents move in stages into the department's online system, DOB NOW. This means building owners, developers, and members of the construction industry can submit documents from their homes or offices. The data is entered directly into the system by an industry professional, eliminating the need for paper processing and data entry. Almost immediately after it is filed, the information becomes publicly available on NYC Open Data.

DOB NOW makes it easier for users to interact with the department online. It also standardizes fields and format, making the information more accurate and easier for the department to process. These digital trails unlock the information from the previous, paper-based system for more efficient analysis. With the uniform online system, DOB can now quickly perform accurate and meaningful analysis to find construction trends in the five boroughs, marshal its enforcement resources more effectively, and determine ways to increase efficiency within the department.

On December 13, 2017, DOB issued a permit to install a sidewalk shed on Crown Street in Brooklyn—an ordinary, and yet often misunderstood, action. Multiply this sidewalk shed by thousands of others like it and you have one of the most notable features of the modern streetscape: The temporary structures that many New Yorkers pass under every day on their way to work and school. Not to be confused with scaffolding, the purpose of sidewalk sheds is to protect pedestrians from hazardous conditions during building construction, demolition, or maintenance. If DOB finds a building façade to be unsafe, building owners are legally required to take action and install pedestrian protection, such as a sidewalk shed, in front of the building until there is no longer a danger to the public. On the surface, sidewalk sheds reflect the boom in construction that is happening across New York City. Behind each shed is a permit signaling the DOB has approved it.

Applications for these sidewalk sheds can be submitted through DOB NOW: Build. This data is used to create a map that is updated in real time, giving the public a holistic view of this critical safety equipment and the city's construction landscape. On this map, anyone can find the location of every active sidewalk shed permit in the city, how long it has been up, and who is responsible for its maintenance. Thanks to this map, and the underlying digital permit data, the DOB can track every shed around the City, and take quick action if the shed is poorly maintained or is no longer necessary for public safety.

Elevators are another example. Bikes, cars, ferries, and subway trains help New Yorkers move from neighborhood to neighborhood across the boroughs. But we also rely on elevators to move up and down in our increasingly vertical environment. With large, affordable and market-rate residential towers rising above the skyline across the five boroughs, more and more of New York City's growing population is depending on elevators as an everyday necessity of life. It is more important than ever that the city's 80,000+ elevators are safe, reliable, and well-maintained. To ensure that property owners are meeting their legal responsibility to properly maintain elevators, DOB is relying on improved data collection and new technologies to deepen its understanding of these critical modes of transportation.

Elevator inspections keep elevators one of the safest forms of travel in New York City, with billions of trips every year and an extremely low number of incidents. As of September 17, 2018, DOB will require every one of the 160,000+ annual elevator inspections to be submitted through DOB NOW: Safety, which will in turn become a dataset on NYC Open Data. Elevators in New York City are required to undergo two inspections a year: one performed by a representative of the City and the other by an elevator company contracted by the building owner. When DOB finds unsafe or inappropriate conditions, it issues a violation, requiring building owners to make amends. The violation data is also on NYC Open Data and is used by companies to understand New York City real estate. Rentlogic, a local startup, uses violation data, which includes elevator violations, to assign letter grades to buildings to keep renters informed about the history of individual buildings before they sign a lease.

Open Data Week 2018

The de Blasio Administration celebrated the second annual NYC Open Data Week, a week-long festival to raise awareness of the public data published by City agencies. More than 1,800 New Yorkers attended over 30 events produced by 51 private sector, academic, cultural institution, and government partners. Open Data Week was supported by BetaNYC, a civic tech organization based in New York City, whose Open Data Week events included School of Data and Unlocking Open Data for Community Boards with the Manhattan Borough President's Office. Other events included a data art exhibition, an open contracting treasure hunt, a tour of a data exhibit at the Museum of the City of New York, and workshops for student entrepreneurs on how to use open data to build business.

Event Highlights Include:

Our Stories: The Soul of Data was organized by First Star College of Staten Island Academy with the Administration for Children's Services. The free, four-hour workshop empowered 20+ foster youth with the tools to find and use NYC Open Data.

The Open Data L-Train Innovation Challenge was a day-long event organized by Forum for the Future, Collectively, and Grand Central Tech. Designers and civic technologists joined a day of creative problem-solving for urban challenges related to the L-Train shutdown.

At Identify Affordable Housing Risks with Data at Brooklyn Borough Hall, OpenGov and the Brooklyn Borough President's Office unveiled a new web portal to host housing data from multiple sources, allowing organizations to share, validate, and bolster their findings and research to show trends and threats to affordable housing in Brooklyn.

Learning About NYC: Environment & Sustainability

In honor of earth day, the open data community gathered at Civic Hall to learn about open data related to environmental protection, sustainability and green initiatives. Representatives from NYC Department of Parks & Recreation, the Mayor’s Office of Sustainability, and NYC Department of environmental protection joined speakers from the Participatory Budgeting Project, New Schools’s Urban Systems Lab, The Nature Conservancy, and USDA Forest Service’s NYC Urban Field Station.

Open Data Contest Winners Announced

An analysis of survival rates of New York City’s street trees, a participatory budgeting project to track how dollars from the program are spent on capital projects, and an atlas of New York City’s sewers won prizes.

Powered by NYC

MODA partnered with the Mayor’s Fund for the City of New York, Omidyar Network, Reboot, and the NYU GovLab on “Powered by NYC Open Data,” a research project to better understand and provide tactics for agencies to be more responsive to their stakeholders’ data demands. In April, NYC Parks piloted the tactics with 10 CBOs.

Learning About NYC: Transportation

Guest Speakers from NYC Taxi & Limousine Commission spoke about policymaking using taxi and FHV data; Department of Citywide Administrative Services spoke about City’s fleets; Department of Sanitation discussed PlowNYC; and NYC Department of Transportation will talk about the Citywide Mobility Survey. A panel discussion moderated by Sarah Kaufman, Assistant Director for Technology Programming at the NYU Rudin Center for Transportation, followed.

Improving Policy, Enforcing Compliance

NYC Open Data is powered by the NYC Open Data Law, a statutory mandate that enacts one of the most robust municipal open data policies in the world. The law creates a framework that requires the same data used by the City to be accessible to the public (when appropriate). The open data policy that was borne from the law is unparalleled among American municipalities, and the amendments the City Council has passed over the last four years are designed to help the program continue to thrive in the future.

The groundbreaking Open Data Law—Local Law 11 of 2012—requires mayoral agencies to publish their public data by December 31, 2018. MODA and DoITT are leading this charge. Every summer for the past five years, DoITT and MODA have put out the NYC Open Data Plan, which provides an update of the City’s progress by listing pertinent City-managed public datasets yet to be published. Since the last update (between July 2017 and June 2018, or FY2018):

DATASETS WERE ADDED TO THE PLAN FOR FUTURE RELEASE

As the amount of data collected and maintained by agencies grows, Open Data Coordinators and the Open Data team have continued to identify new public datasets for future publication.

DATASETS THAT DO NOT QUALIFY AS “PUBLIC DATASETS” WERE REMOVED FROM THE PLATFORM

Removing or replacing low-value, inaccurate, or outdated datasets is crucial to improving how users search for and find the data they want. In January 2018, the Open Data team announced a new data removal policy in line with Local Law 107 of 2015, regarding data retention.

In December 2017, Local Laws 244 and 251 of 2017 were ratified, extending the duration of the Open Data Law and creating new annual reporting requirements. For the first time this year, the Open Data team is reporting, in one comprehensive tracker, a full inventory of all datasets on the platform. Each dataset now contains metadata on its scheduled and actual publication date, and whether automation is feasible. Compiling this information in one place has given the Open Data team as well as the public a better view of agency compliance with data standards, timely publication, and updates to datasets—meaning a more effective mechanism for holding agencies accountable. Insights surfaced by these new reporting requirements include:

In addition to providing transparency into the way government works, open data has utility across numerous City operations. Enforcing compliance with open data policy has encouraged better data management. The Open Data team is dedicated to helping agencies comply with open data policy, not only to meet the letter of the law, but also because open data is a core component of citywide data strategy.

NYC Open Data is a first-class data program with citywide scope

As a highly visible, legislated, and uniquely cross-agency data program, NYC Open Data has developed a robust internal communications and management structure that touches over 100 City agencies and offices. Engagement with agencies through appointed Open Data Coordinators aids collaboration among agency legal, IT, program officers, and executives to improve data workflows to comply with the law. Additionally, managing Open Data Coordinators as a community of practice creates pathways for organizational learning in data and analytics subjects across domain areas. In March, the Open Data team partnered with Socrata, BetaNYC, the Sunlight Foundation, and the Department of Citywide Administrative Services to host the first full-day training for NYC Open Data Coordinators, providing expert insight on best practices for data publishing and civic engagement.

Open Data spurs better data quality and data governance

When Open Data Coordinators broker conversations about data publishing with agency data owners, these owners begin to think about other uses of the data outside of its transactional purpose. This cultivates more collegiality around data as a shared asset, which facilitates better information stewardship in departments. Developing comprehensive data inventories and dataset publishing schedules also encourages data quality controls where they may not have existed previously. Local Law 107 of 2015 requires agencies to produce data dictionaries for every dataset. Data dictionaries now accompany 89% of datasets, many of which had this metadata documented for the first time as a result of this effort.

Open Data underlies data sharing and analytics practices

The best way to maintain and develop institutional knowledge is to make it discoverable through a web search. For this reason, the NYC Open Data Platform is in many instances an ideal inter-agency data-sharing platform for internal use cases. The Platform allows analysts at City agencies to access other agencies’ datasets. When models built by City analysts are powered by NYC Open Data, analytical results are easily verified, and models can be scaled and maintained without costly dependency on non-public data or proprietary IT systems. In a survey of 58 analysts across 27 City agencies, the majority indicated that NYC Open Data is a primary data source for their work. MODA analysts practice open source analytics, advocating where possible for the use of open datasets in their data science deliverables. Additional data analysis projects that use the City’s open datasets can be found on the Open Data Project Gallery on nyc.gov/data.

Open Data is a conduit for crowdsourcing public expertise on data

With nearly 100,000 unique monthly users, the NYC Open Data Platform engages a large number of data experts whose expertise is leveraged to identify best-in-class data standards. In 2016, MODA crowdsourced an open data geospatial standard, soliciting advice from a local community of open data users and Geographic Information System (GIS) experts, and resulting in standardized geospatial fields such as street address, latitude and longitude, tax lot IDs, and neighborhood tabulation areas (NTAs). In December 2016, a group of high-frequency users collaborated on a new data dictionary template, which agencies now use to develop metadata for datasets that previously had poor documentation. This effort was taken to the next level when the Open Data team partnered with Tiny Panther Consulting, the Sloan Foundation, and METRO (the Metropolitan Libraries Council) to audit the most-used 100 datasets for metadata quality earlier this summer. The results of this initiative will be shared later this year.

Open Data helps agencies comply with other public information requirements

NYC Open Data is powered by a web interface that allows users to access disaggregated tabular data on any browser, making it a scalable solution for agencies mandated to disclose certain types of public information. Through a memorandum of understanding between MODA, DoITT, and the Department of Records and Information Services, agencies can meet legislated data reporting requirements by maintaining datasets in a machine-readable form on the Open Data Platform, rather than transmitting PDFs of tabular data to the municipal library.

| Department of Finance (DOF)                 | Personal Property - Remarks Record               | This dataset contains remarks information (if any) for recorded documents.   | Monthly          | 12/31/2018   | Same as ACRIS - Personal Property Remarks in the Current Inventory.   |
| Department of Finance (DOF)                 | Public Improvement Lien (Mechanics Liens) Docket | Details about claims of non-payment for labor or materials provided to a government contractor or subcontractor.   | Monthly          | 12/31/2018   | DOF is the collection agency for these mechanic's liens. We do not generate these liens at DOF. Each agency provides DOF with certain necessary lien information in order to collect against those liens. However, this is all information provided to DOF from the agency that placed the lien onto the vendor. If there are necessary data points that fall outside of the report we currently publish, DOF will be unable to accommodate the request as that data does not belong to DOF, but rather the agency executing the mechanic lien. . |

| Department of Finance (DOF)                     | CPRR  | CPRR interfaces for payments via web pages or in person with various agencies such as DOF Parking & Camera Violations, Property Taxes, DCAS, DOHMH, DOB, DOR, HPD, FDNY, ECB, SAPO, DPR, DOT, DEP, BIC, DCA, OATH, DFTA, TLC. | To Be Determined | 12/31/2018   | DOF is the collection agency for 15 Mayoral agencies. CPRR is the repository for the collection of payments made to the City. These payments span across many areas of collection (i.e., parking tickets, property taxes, ECB violations, elevator repairs, FDNY charges, HPD charges, Sanitation charges, DEP charges, etc.). Some data is tax secret and/or private, while other data is already posted onto the Open Data portal (see parking summons data set and property tax dataset). Further, DOF is not the custodial agency for the majority of the payments collected. We do not have any knowledge of why the payment is being collected, the calculations used to arrive at those payment amounts, any penalties assessed, miscellaneous fees, etc. This data comes from the system of record for these payments, not CPRR. For example, STARS is the system of record for parking summons fees. CPRR is responsible for collecting the payment, but has no understanding of the underlying data attached to that payment. STARS data regarding the payment is already distilled and provided within our parking data sets currently on the OD portal. In the alternative, lets say a request is received by DOF regarding elevator charges attached to a property tax bill. DOF is unable to provide any knowledge or understanding as to the nature of that charge. We are only provided with the amount owed by the charging agency. The requestor is referred to DOB for explanation as to the charge and the resulting amount. It is our recommendation that each system of record be responsible for the data surrounding payments and not CPRR. Each agency should have the right to determine what data they provide to the public. |
| Department of Health and Mental Hygiene (DOHMH) | Immunization indicators                       | Immunization indicators in the Mayor's Management Report (DOHMH, Service 1, Goal 1b: (1 table).   | Annually         | 9/30/2017    | Bureau of Immunizations does not currently produce reports or tabular data for general public dissemination, based on the underlying data used to generate Items 1 and 3 of the Mayor's Management Report. Calculating these statistics, conducting quality assurances, and suppressing cells to ensure anonymity would represent undue burden to Bureau of Immunizations without generating significant additional value for the program or for residents of New York City .  |
| Department of Health and Mental Hygiene (DOHMH) | Baby Friendly Hospitals                       | List of Baby Friendly Hospitals.  | Annually         | 9/30/2017    | The agency does not capture enough data points to make it a viable dataset. Therefore it will not be released.   |
| Department of Health and Mental Hygiene (DOHMH) | Healthcare Facilities Directory               | A list of hospitals, nursing homes and adult care facilities.   | Annually         | 12/31/2018   | Data not owned by agency.  |
| Department of Health and Mental Hygiene (DOHMH) | Adults Reporting Air Conditioning in the home | Estimated number of adults who reported having a functioning air conditioner in any room in their home, rounded to the nearest 1,000.   | Annually         | 12/31/2018   | This data was a one time survey conducted by the agency and to release the data will be an administrative burden to the agency.  |

| Department of Records and Information Services (DORIS) | NYC Municipal Archives Collections   | The Archives collections data set consists of the descriptions of each of the collections that are available for research in the NYC Municipal Archives.  | Monthly          | 6/1/2018     | The NYC Municipal Archives collections are being listed as part of the NYC Municipal Library Catalog.   |
| Department of Transportation (DOT)                     | Alternate Side Parking   | The City suspends alternate side parking (street cleaning) regulations, for both street cleaning purposes and traffic flow, on the 34 legal and religious holidays. This includes suspension of street cleaning regulations at metered spaces. This policy is implemented jointly by the Department of Transportation, the Department of Sanitation, and the Police Department. On major legal holidays, No Stopping, No Standing, and No Parking regulations are suspended, except where those regulations are normally in effect seven days a week. On all other holidays, only Street Cleaning Rules are suspended. All other regulations remain in effect. Parking meter regulations will be suspended on major legal holidays. | Annually         | 12/31/2018   | Does not meet Open Data requirements.   |
| Department of Transportation (DOT)                     | Manhattan River Crossings  | Presents vehicular volumes, classification and trends for all bridge and tunnel facilities serving Manhattan River Crossings.   | To Be Determined | 12/31/2018   | Does not meet Open Data requirements.   |

Local Law 244 of 2017: Freedom of Information Law responses

Local Law 7 of 2016 requires agencies to “review responses to freedom of information law [FOIL] requests that include the release of data to determine if such responses consist of or include public data sets that have not yet been included on the single web portal or the inclusion” on the Open Data Portal. Additionally, each City agency shall disclose “the total number, since the last update, of such agency’s freedom of information law responses that included the release of data, the total number of such responses determined to consist of or include a public data set that had not yet been included on the single web portal and the name of such public data set, where applicable, and the total number of such responses that resulted in voluntarily disclosed information being made accessible through the single web portal.”

Table 1. Quantity of FOIL responses that included the release of data in the following categories for FY2018. View the dataset online at: <https://data.cityofnewyork.us/City-Government/2018-Open-Data-Plan-FOIL-Report/cvse-perd>

Agency Civic Engagement Commitments

For the first time this year, the Open Data team required agencies to commit to three civic engagement activities between September 15, 2018 and September 15, 2019. Agencies that opted-out were required to list their reason with a public statement.

See the dataset online at: <https://data.cityofnewyork.us/City-Government/2018-Open-Data-Plan-Civic-Engagements/sf92-v8wr>

- Engage a professional (internally or externally) to develop user personas and better engage your users.
- Develop and convene a focus group or advisory council of users of your agency's open data to learn more about how they use your data assets, and to request feedback
- Offer a public email newsletter on your agency's website (or on the Open Data website) and send out at least two communications annually about your agency's open data assets
- Produce a curriculum to be used to engage an audience around your agency's open data assets at an event of your choosing or working with the Open Data Team to identify an opportunity
- Produce your own event to discuss your agency's open data assets (this could be a 1 hour workshop, a 24 hour hackathon, or something else)
- Share Open Data swag and informational one-pager with your community engagement liaisons to share at your agency's existing community touchpoints
- Present about your agency's open data assets in an academic or school environment
- Speak at an event hosted by your agency about your agency's open data assets
- Speak at a partner's event (in NYC) about your agency's open data assets. (e.g., Community Boards)
- Identify someone from your agency to speak about your agency's open data assets at an event as a part of Open Data Week 2019
- Record a 60-90 second video describing your agency's data assets or a recent data asset release with your agency's marketing team or in collaboration with the Open Data Team.
- Present at one of the NYC Open Data Team's quarterly Civic Hall events
- Post about your agency's open data assets on your agency's Facebook or LinkedIn channels
- Add a project made by your agency to the NYC Open Data Project Gallery
- Include agency's open data commitment in a report published by your agency
- Write a blog post about your agency's existing open data assets on the NYC Open Data blog
- Write a blog post about your agency's existing open data assets on your agency's blog/website
- Advertise NYC Open Data on your agency's website
- Tweet whenever a new open data asset is published
- Send 1 tweet per month about your agency's existing open data assets

For agencies not engaging in the civic engagement commitment, a public statement for why.

Center of Innovation through Data Intelligence (CIDI): CIDI does not have data on Open Data.

Civil Service Commission (CSC): The Civil Service Commission has posted data to the open data portal which provides the general public with a historic view of our agency's activity for a given year without identifying individual appellants. In the interest of improving accessibility to the data that we have posted, the Commission will provide a link to the open data portal on its website. The Commission hears appeals in Civil Service Law Section 50 disqualifications for employment and Section 76 disciplinary cases. Therefore, the Commission's data consists of sensitive, confidential information of a limited number of appellants. Given the confidential nature of the appeals before the Commission, and the limited segment of the public affected by these appeals, we believe that any further public outreach concerning our data would not be beneficial to the population we serve.

Financial Information Services Agency (FISA) & Office of Payroll Administration: As indicated above, FISA-OPA is committed to advertising NYC Open Data by displaying the Open Data logo on our public-facing website. FISA-OPA holds the unique role of managing citywide financial and payroll systems and as such we do not currently participate in any social media platforms. Therefore, with respect to additional civic engagement efforts suggested, because of the back-office nature of our business operations and the fact that we are merely the custodians of the information supplied by other agencies (who are the business owners), we believe such agencies are better suited to engage the public with regard to the substance of their data.

Mayor's Office of Minority and Women-owned Business Enterprises (OMWBE): Mayor's Office of M/WBE does not have its own data. Our data is collected, retained, and released by the Mayor's Office of Contract Services or NYC Small Business Services.

New York City Council (NYCC): The New York City Council will continue its oversight over the implementation of the Open Data Law, through hearings and public engagement, and will continue to promote open data in New York City.

School Construction Authority (SCA): The SCA engages in continuous civic engagement. The SCA's capital plan and capital plan amendment review processes require public hearings in 32 community school districts; the siting process for new schools requires a public engagement period involving community and school boards; and, the capital improvement project review process often requires engagement with PTAs and PAs. The SCA is a capital agency and, as such, there is no funding for staff to perform additional civic engagement functions such as those defined by this program.

Staten Island Borough President's Office (SIBPO): The Staten Island Borough President's Office will additionally create a Facebook post on their website, and, engage through their BP Assist app.

Local Law 251 of 2018: Status of All Public Datasets

Starting this year, the Open Data plan is required to include comprehensive information on each dataset on the Open Data Portal, including the dataset's:

- Scheduled publication date
- Actual publication date
- Most recent update date
- URL
- Whether it complies data retention standard (which mandates that row-level data be maintained on the dataset)
- Whether it has a data dictionary
- Whether it meets the geocoding standard, does not meet the geocoding, or is ineligible for the geospatial standard
- Whether updates to the dataset are automated;
- Whether updates to the dataset “feasibly can be automated”

Published Data Asset Inventory

This information is included for each of the 2,000+ datasets currently available on the NYC Open Data Portal in a tracker that is automatically updated daily. A dashboard visualizing this information, including, will be made available later this year.

Open Data Plan Tracker

In addition, a list of every dataset that is currently or has ever been included on a previous NYC Open Data Plan, its scheduled publication date, and whether it was published or removed from the Plan, has been compiled. Of the 1259 entries:

- 520 datasets have been released. These datasets have URLs to their current location on the Open Data Portal.
- 523 datasets are scheduled for future release and are included in the 2018 Open Data Plan.
- 180 datasets have been removed from the plan. All removals were listed in the Open Data Plan’s “Removed Datasets” section with a justification for removal.
  - 24 datasets were released, but then removed from the portal.
  - 12 datasets are currently listed as “Under Review.” The Open Data team is still investigating whether these datasets were released with different titles or removed from the plan or Portal upon the agency’s request.
